Brilliant Earth 18-kt. gold sapphire snowflake earrings, platinum bouquet diamond ring, and platinum leaves and buds ring.

Brilliant Earth

After watching Blood Diamond, we were at a loss. We can't buy diamonds from Africa, but we love those sparkly rocks, don't we? The solution: Brilliant Earth diamonds. They're dedicated to providing the highest quality jewelry originating from pure sources and harvested using socially responsible practices. The company also provides education about the social and environmental issues affecting the jewelry industry and identifies ways to help, while supporting underdeveloped communities ravaged by the jewelry industry by donating 5 percent of their profits to Diamonds for Africa Fund. Truly brilliant!

Kristen McCloud 14-kt. gold-fill wire wrapped leaf lariat.

Kristen McCloud

While Kristen McCloud plants a tree through American Forest Organization with every piece she sells, now she's designed the "Global ReLeaf" necklace as a reminder of the importance of forests, which aid in filtering water, removing air pollution, sequestering carbon and providing habitats for wildlife.

Kimmie Cares

We love Asian-looking dolls, but one that sends an important message? Even better! Created to help women with cancer explain to their children what they are going through, the plush Kimmie Cares doll comes in five ethnic varieties, including an Asian one named Audrey, along with removable wigs to reflect the stages of hair loss and regrowth during chemotherapy, as well as the book Mommy and Me: Taking Care of Each Other. Proceeds from the sales of the dolls go to Partners For A Cure Foundation, which helps cancer patients with childcare services or transportation during cancer treatments.

Tarma Designs

Named after a quaint Peruvian town at the foot of the Andes, Tarma creates jewelry out of recycled stainless steel that "celebrate the spirit of adventure and a love of the outdoors." Tarma supports equitable commerce, social diversity and sustainable environmental practices. Check out their new Mountain and Appalachian Trail series, which benefits the Appalachian Trail Conservancy.

Tarma mariposa necklace, shell cutout earrings, and flower power earrings.
